Police use sniffer dogs every day to find drugs and other illegal items. However, not every dog can be a sniffer dog. Sniffer dog training starts with classes that teach dogs how to behave.

Dogs are trained to listen to their handler and also to point their noses at certain items when they smell them. If they cannot follow directions, they will not become sniffer dogs. Sniffer dogs are taught in steps to recognize smells. First, the dog will play with a toy with its handler. Over time, the smell the dog needs to find is put onto the toy so that the dog connects the smell with playtime. Then, when the dog finds a toy or object with this smell, it will let its handler know, and it understands it will now get to play.

To help the dog practice, the handler will hide the object with the smell the dog is looking for (especially the smell of drugs, meat, and fruit) in different places, and the dog has to hunt for it. When the dog can find objects with these smells, it is ready to help out in the real world.
