Graffiti can definitely be a form of art. The city of Fort Smith, Arkansas, gives space on walls in its downtown area to artists so that they may create graffiti murals*. Fort Smith also hosts a ten-day art festival every year. Artists paint, poets read poems, and skateboard art* competitions are held.

This festival has been held since 2015, and organizers* have invited graffiti artists from around the US and more than 15 other countries to participate. The themes of the murals range from playful to political ones, and the murals have made the Fort Smith downtown area seem more colorful and alive.

Fort Smith is not the only city with impressive graffiti murals these days. Some other great murals are the Johnny Cash mural on a wall in Sacramento, California, and the famous rainbow-colored “Times Square kiss” mural in New York City.

These impressive works of graffiti just go to show that art can come in many forms, and today, the colorful, fun style of graffiti is a great way to make a downtown area more beautiful.
