If you visit Italy, one event you shouldn't miss is a sagra, a local festival usually held in a small town. In the past, sagre were religious affairs, celebrated in front of churches. Today, they are mainly connected with certain foods, such as mushrooms, cheeses, or truffles*, which are typically produced in the local area.

A sagra takes place in almost any month of the year in different parts of Italy. Among the better-known celebrations is the “fish and potato” sagra, held from late July to mid-August in the city of Lucca. Besides fish and potatoes, people can have delicious grilled meat, home-made cakes, and desserts. Music, dancing, and games also add to the fun. Another interesting sagra, which is held in the central Italian town of Antrodoto, features snails. Here locals and visitors alike can enjoy steaming bowls of stewed snails.

For an authentic taste of Italy, be sure to go to at least one sagra on your trip. You'll not only taste delicious locally produced foods but also experience one of the country's best-loved traditions.
