- (A) Falconry*, or hawking, is the art of hunting together with a bird of prey*.
 (B) Today, hunters in Mongolia and America still use birds to catch their prey.
 (C) Scientific studies have even revealed that these birds can see colors that humans cannot.
 (D) Many birds of prey build their nests in high places, like cliffs or tall trees, to protect their young from predators*.
 (E) It is believed that eagles and hawks can even spot a worm crawling on the ground from atop a tall building or a rabbit that is two miles away.

Dogs are known as “man’s best friend,” but did you know that birds have also worked together with humans for thousands of years? 1. This practice dates back to ancient times, when birds of prey helped humans survive extreme climates by hunting smaller animals—such as foxes, squirrels, rabbits, and fish—for them. 2. Red-tailed hawks and golden eagles are two of the most popular bird choices they work with. This is mainly because of these birds’ extraordinary* eyesight, which is many times sharper than a human’s. 3. This is why they can find animals hidden among trees and rocks. 4. The excellent vision of these two birds of prey makes them perfect hunting partners.

Service dogs are often very cute and well-behaved. This is why people who are scared of dogs might think it is safe to pet them. However, a service dog is always on duty, and the job it is doing—protecting its owner’s life—is very important. So, what should you do when you see a service dog?

The most important thing is not to pet it. Doing so is not only impolite but also dangerous because you may distract the dog from the important job it is doing. In fact, you should not try to interact with the dog at all. This means you should not look at it, try to distract it, get too close to it, or touch its equipment.

Remember, though service dogs may be cute, it’s best to keep your hands off!

Part 3 : 混合題

R&B, funk, and hip hop are three popular types of music that are connected in many ways. However, despite their similarities, each has unique traits that differentiate one from the others.

R&B singers use special vocal techniques to sing elegantly. Their lyrics often include references to love, heartbreak, and even politics. Some R&B songs are sad, while others are full of hope and happiness. The melodies are usually slow and smooth.

While the main focus of R&B is the singer, the singing and instrumentation play equally important roles in funk. This type of music focuses on upbeat* guitar and bass lines. Therefore, these two musical instruments often play solos in funk arrangements. Additionally, the themes of funk music cover a wide range of topics, including partying, social commentary, love, and life situations.

Though influenced by R&B and funk, hip hop is quite different. In contrast to funk, its focus is less on the music, and it generally lacks singing, unlike R&B. Instead, hip hop comes with a beat and usually some simple instrumentation, and a rapper speaks rhythmically over them instead of singing. The lyrics of hip hop may cover partying, drugs, social events, and life situations.

2. From (A) to (F) below, choose the ONES that are true for the three types of music.

A C E

- (A) R&B is known for its elegant and smooth melodies.
- (B) Funk focuses on speaking and the use of guitars.
- (C) R&B and funk contain more topics about romance than hip hop.
- (D) Unlike R&B, hip hop doesn't require any vocal techniques from singers.
- (E) Instrumentation is important in both hip hop and funk.
- (F) R&B, funk, and hip hop cover topics of partying, society, and politics.

3. What does the word “others” in the second paragraph refer to?

other R&B songs
