Plastic straws are not good for the Earth. They take many years to break down into smaller pieces. Moreover, they are single-use items that are often used quickly and then thrown away, just like garbage bags, plastic cups, and takeout boxes. Such items make up a large amount of garbage that is increasing at an alarming rate.

For example, single-use plastic straws are creating a big problem in our world today. They can't be recycled because they are too light. This means these straws do not get separated from other garbage at recycling dumps. Even worse, they begin to fill up these dumps. As plastic straws gradually break down, they separate into very small plastic pieces called microplastics*.

These microplastics can be eaten by birds and sea animals accidentally. After being eaten by these creatures, they stay in their stomachs and can even kill them. Then, when we humans eat those animals, we also eat the microplastics, and this can damage our health.

The best way to fix this problem is to stop using single-use plastic straws. Next time you buy a drink, don't ask for a straw, or you can use your own reusable straw. Such small steps can make a big difference in saving our world, so let's say no to plastic straws!

The issue of waste has become more and more important when it comes to protecting our environment. That's why Henry's group chose waste as the topic of their project this time. Read the following discussion between the members of Henry's group.

(A) Henry

I think it's important that in our project we learn how various types of waste are disposed of* and how they influence our lives. Please share any information you collect on the topic with us.

(B) Sarah

Based on my research, there are three main types of waste: general waste, recyclable waste, and organic waste. Of these, organic waste could be the most environmentally friendly.

(C) Howard

That's correct. Organic waste, such as food waste, or leftovers, can be broken down into compost*, which can then be used to grow plants.

(D) Sunny

It's important to remember that recycling allows us to reuse valuable resources and reduce unnecessary waste. However, we should note that different places have different policies about the collection of recyclable materials.

(E) Annie

Do you know that we can generate electricity from organic waste after microbes* break it down into gas? It's quite amazing, isn't it?

(F) Tim

I also believe it's important to list the ways to dispose of special items that contain materials harmful to the environment, such as batteries. This way, people can learn how to protect our environment.
