- (A) In other words, the more you buy, the lower the price is.
(B) Many people also appreciate the convenience of shopping for a wide range of products all in one place.
(C) To maintain such a membership, however, customers must pay a yearly fee or spend a certain amount each year.
(D) However, in order to receive discounted pricing, some customers may end up buying more than they need and thus waste their money.
(E) They take advantage of traditional celebrations such as Thanksgiving, Christmas, and Chinese New Year to encourage people to spend even more on gifts, food, and decorations.

Big companies like Costco use a number of strategies to lure* customers into purchasing their goods. The first is the members-only strategy, meaning that only members can buy goods or receive discounts. Membership is attractive because it creates a sense of ownership and belonging for customers. They may feel more special or more valued than other people if they receive special treatment as members of a specific club or store. 1.

The second strategy is the “buy in large amounts and save” strategy. 2. Large retailers use this strategy to get customers to spend more while keeping their own costs low at the same time. 3.

The third strategy that encourages customers to spend more involves holiday deals offered by large stores. Such seasonal sales give customers another reason to buy things even when they don't really need to. 4. At times, certain holiday deals are purely meant to lure people into buying more. One example is “Black Friday,” when prices are often cut dramatically so that people will want to buy more items and thus spend more money.

The latest technology seems to never stop showing up in our daily lives. This reality is particularly evident in Amazon's latest take on the grocery store: Amazon Go.

Amazon Go is a new style of grocery store that allows shoppers to take out their phone, sign in to the Amazon Go app, and run the phone over a sensor* bar as they walk into the store. After that, a shopper can put their phone away, shop as they like, and then walk out without needing to wait in a checkout line or pay at a register.

When customers are shopping in an Amazon Go store, every item they pick up is put into their virtual* cart. They can choose from everyday goods, such as milk and eggs, to more special items, such as prepared meals and sandwiches, take-home meals created by in-house chefs, and locally produced cheeses and chocolate. Everything that is taken off the shelf is saved in their app, and they are charged automatically and sent an e-receipt in the app after they walk out.

Amazon Go makes this shopping experience possible by using some of the newest technology available, including computer vision, deep learning algorithms*, and sensor fusion*. Amazon has named this technology, which is similar to what is used in self-driving cars, "Just Walk Out" technology, and it is certain to change the shopping experience as we know it.
