The handshake is a common method of greeting others around the world. However, just because everyone knows about it, that doesn't mean it's the same everywhere. In fact, the handshake can differ from country to country. The following are a few examples.

In Mexico, a handshake isn't just a handshake. Often, it comes with a hug as well, so don't be afraid of physical contact. On the contrary, in the neighboring United States, the handshake doesn't usually come with a hug. Instead, it should come with eye contact. Looking away while someone is shaking your hand might be seen as impolite or make you look like you've got something to hide.

Eye contact also goes along with a handshake in Brazil, only with a slight difference. If a man shakes hands with a woman, he also kisses her on the cheek. The number of kisses depends on where you are in Brazil. However, wherever you are, it is always between one and three kisses. By contrast, men never shake hands with women in Morocco; they do so only with other men. Furthermore, in that country, a handshake should be soft, not firm, and one's grip* should be light.

Whether you are traveling somewhere for business or for pleasure, be sure to look up the right way to shake hands there before you go. It could make all the difference.

註：grip 緊握

The Dog, the Rooster, and the Fox

(adapted from Aesop's Fables)

Once upon a time, a dog and a rooster went on a trip together. One night, they decided to rest in a forest. So the rooster flew up into a tree and sat on a branch high above, while the dog slept below at the foot of the tree. When it was almost dawn, the rooster started to crow so loudly that he attracted a fox's attention. The fox thought he could make a meal out of the bird. Therefore, he walked toward the tree and spoke to the rooster in the branches: "Because you sing so well and are such a useful bird to all living creatures, I would like to invite you to come down so that we can sing and have fun together."

"I think that is a good idea," replied the rooster. "Come to the foot of the tree, my friend." However, when the fox moved closer to the tree, he found that the dog was waiting there for him. Then the dog ended his life.
