Humans are creatures of habit. Hence, we don't 1. enjoy it when our daily routines are disrupted or when we have to take a different approach to something. 2. reason we avoid change is that it often requires effort and commitment.

This is especially true when it comes to changing our response to climate change. Reversing the damage 3. human activity has done to our environment is going to require us to change how we live in many ways. First, we'll need to avoid 4. traditional fossil fuels. This might mean choosing public transport 5. private vehicles or switching to cleaner energy sources. Second, we'll probably also need to consume far fewer animal products, 6. include what we eat and wear. This will also greatly affect our life.

Significant changes like these won't be easy 7. because change can cause stress. Professor Griffon Pinchot, 8., thinks we can heal the planet and have fun at the same time. He believes people can be inspired to make changes if they know they will become happier 9. consuming less, working together, and caring more for the environment.

Sadly, not enough has been done so far to prevent climate change. Can we change that? Absolutely! If we don't, it could 10. to be a disaster. After all, we only have one planet.

One of the most famous inventors who has ever lived is Thomas Edison. Many of the things he created with the power of his mind are still used by people everywhere in their daily lives. We can say that his inventions have shaped the world we live in today.

Edison was born in a small town in Ohio in 1847. As a child, he hated school. In fact, he attended school for only three months before he was kicked out. After that, he mostly learned by reading books on his own. In his free time, he loved to do scientific experiments, especially with chemicals.

In his early twenties, Edison often did his experiments at his workplace. Sometimes, those experiments went wrong, causing damage to his workplace. However, in 1869, he had his first success, inventing a machine that could show the changing values of stocks in real time. By the 1870s, he had his own lab, a place where he could invent all day and every day. Over the next few years, he invented the record player and then the electric light bulb. He even invented the first motion picture, or movie, and made improvements to the paper that photos were printed on. His inventions touched almost every aspect of people's lives. After a long and productive life, he passed away in 1931, leaving behind a legacy that will never be forgotten.
