Koalas are cute animals. Many people think that they would make great pets. However, it is actually against the law to keep a koala as a pet. That is a good thing because koalas may be cute to look at, but they would be very boring pets. They won't sleep beside you in bed because they like to sleep up in trees. Moreover, koalas can sleep for twenty hours a day!

When they are not asleep, koalas spend most of their time eating. They are herbivores—animals that eat only plants. Herbivores often sleep very little and eat a lot, but koalas are an exception to this rule. They eat mainly eucalyptus* leaves, which don't give them a lot of energy, so they move very little when awake and spend a lot of time sleeping to save energy.

As nocturnal* animals, koalas sleep mostly during the day and feed at night. This is just one more reason why koalas would not be good pets. They would barely have any time to keep you company!
