Dear Alex,

Thanks again for visiting us. We hope you enjoyed your trip 16. Taiwan. My sister and I have really fond 17. of your stay, and we were sad to see you go. We rarely get to 18. with interesting foreigners like you. The things you said about your country 19. us, and we learned so much. We both now understand that it is important to learn about other cultures. What we learned has made us become more open to new experiences.

My mother also looked really 20. with her gift. I hope you didn't think it was mean or 21. when we laughed at your gift of a clock. In Mandarin, "give a clock" sounds like "send someone to their final rest." Therefore, giving someone a clock as a present 22. very unlucky in Chinese culture. 23., if you're worried she didn't like it, don't be! She knows you're not familiar with our language and 24., so it's not the end of the world. 25., she has told us many times how much she loves it. Also, we still feel that our friendship got off to a good start. Now you know one more thing about our culture!

Best wishes,

Dina

People often have goldfish as pets. They keep them in water tanks called aquariums. They feed the fish once a day and clean the aquariums every now and then. Goldfish make good pets as they aren’t noisy and don’t need any cleaning or petting. Plus, they never stop moving and their cute, big eyes are always open.

This may make it seem as if goldfish never sleep, but this isn’t true. Of course, it’s very different from the way humans sleep. In fact, it’s more like resting. They drift* around in a small space, only moving a little. They must do so to remain stable in the water. Mostly, their color also fades when they’re resting, though nobody quite knows why.

Goldfish owners should remember not to turn on the aquarium light for the whole day. They rest better in the dark and too much light can be bad for them. Oh, and don’t disturb* them when they’re “off color.” Then you won’t need to lose any sleep over your goldfish!

註：drift 漂移 disturb 打擾
