I'm a sniffer dog trainer. We can train these dogs to do some amazing things. In Pingtung, sniffer dogs 16. trees with a disease called brown root rot. When a dog finds a sick tree, it sits next to the tree and waits for a trainer like me to give it a reward. Then, workers come and dig out the 17. tree before it falls and hurts someone. This method has been so successful that parks all over Taiwan are starting to use sniffer dogs too.

Because of their superior olfactory* sensitivity, 18. is not surprising that sniffer dogs can not only find sick trees but also help to predict when certain problems are about to affect humans. I remember one woman, Maria Tello 19. had diabetes. One night, her dog Malachi woke up. He could smell that her blood sugar was dangerously low and woke her up. He then ran to get her medicine. Malachi actually saved Maria's life five times that year!

So how do these dogs do it? Diseases create chemical changes in plants, animals, and even humans. These chemical changes create special smells, and we trainers familiarize* the dogs with these smells over and over again. Then, we teach the dogs a specific action to 20. when they detect these smells. After the dogs are trained, they're ready to work. Pretty cool, huh?

Did you know that dogs can smell things 10,000 times better than humans? That may seem impossible, but it’s true. This great sense of smell makes dogs great partners for policemen. Dogs can be trained to sniff out all kinds of things, like drugs, bombs, cash, and food.

They can even smell what is hidden inside other things because they can smell in layers*. For example, they can sniff out a rubber ball wrapped with a smelly basketball shirt and closed inside a wooden box. Isn’t that incredible?

Detection dogs are not new. In fact, dogs have been used to keep people safe for thousands of years and through several wars. These dogs not only have a great sense of smell. They can also recognize voices and even the shape of a person’s shadow.

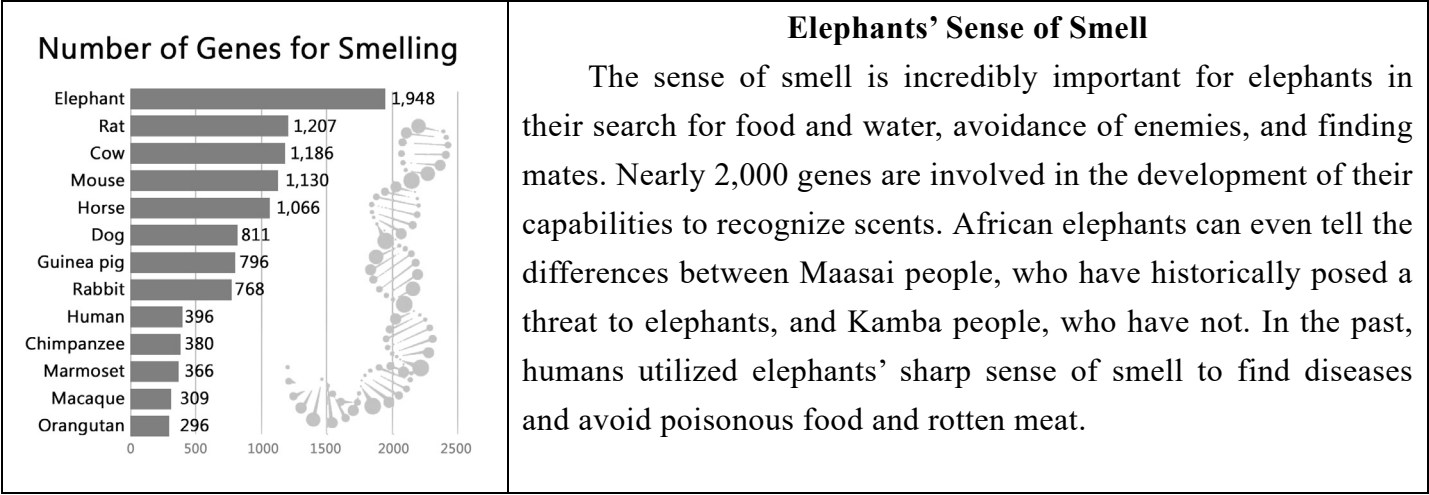

Detection dogs are used in airports to sniff out dangerous substances* and fruits and vegetables that could be bad for local ecosystems*. Before you get on a plane, make sure you don’t bring any fruit with you, or you may have an unwanted dog friend!
